

The Jive Aces help charity SolarAid and the UK government to spread some sunshine during the dark winter months

Tuesday 4th January 2014: The UK's number one jive and swing band, The Jive Aces, have launched a new version of the classic song – Bring me Sunshine – in support of SolarAid's work distributing solar lights in Africa. The international development charity is also being supported by the UK government who are matching all donations made to SolarAid until March 1st 2014.

Bring me Sunshine has been launched to spread some sunshine during the wet winter months in the UK. SolarAid's Chief Fundraiser Richard Turner explains:

"The headlines of the past few days say it all; people in the UK are fed up with the winter blues. But whilst we put up with the wind and the rain in the UK there are families in Africa switching on solar power for the first time. We hope that this video will bring a smile to your face and that the 'feel good' feeling of helping others will help brighten your own day. Once you've donated, make sure no-one is left out in the cold by sharing it with friends and families too!"

Lead singer from The Jive Aces Ian Clarkson says: "Bring Me Sunshine is one of our all-time favourite songs and we very happy that Solar Aid are using our version for this great cause and to help spread the sunshine in both the UK and Africa! We love the ground breaking work that SolarAid are doing and were astounded something so simple as a small solar light could have so many immediate benefits, and give a brighter future to people in need."
